■Hikari Miso's History and Progress with Organic Products

Hikari Miso is the first to undertake production of organic miso. In 1997, the company earned its first certification from the Organic Crop Improvement Association (OCIA), a private American accreditation organization for organic producers, prior to the organic certification program JAS in place in 2000.

■Certified Organic Miso

The Hikari Miso Factory is certified as an organic food processing plant.

All the ingredients in miso, with the exception of the inorganic compounds water and salt, must have been organically grown before the miso can be labeled "organic." Organically grown farm produce must be grown without pesticides and chemical fertilizers, therefore the soybeans and rice we use as ingredients in our organic Yuki Miso are produced on strictly controlled farms. We now provide products that are certified as organic under the systems in place in our major markets of Japan, the United States and Europe.
