English Version of “LIVE Risk Prediction Training” Released

Tokyo, Japan – September 28, 2018 — The Japan Automobile Federation (JAF) (President: Takayoshi Yashiro) has released a series of video training exercises entitled “LIVE Risk Prediction Training,” in which foreigners wanting to drive in Japan can get a first-hand feel for the potential dangers they may face, as well as how to effectively predict and avoid them.

What is Risk Prediction Training?

Risk Prediction Training is known as an effective accident prevention method in the field of traffic safety education. It helps drivers to predict the dangers hidden in road traffic and respond to them appropriately, thereby preventing accidents from happening. By watching videos while at home to train for dangerous situations beforehand, drivers will be able to better predict dangers once they’re actually on the road in Japan.

”LIVE Risk Prediction Training” English Site

The videos viewable at “LIVE Risk Prediction Training” are the English counterparts to JAF’s previously released Japanese content. They feature typical situations that foreigners may encounter while driving a car in Japan. In the initial phase, JAF selected four videos for the English release, namely “Urban areas,” “Motorcycles,” “Expressways,” and “Snowy road,” with plans to expand available content in the future.

[How the Training Works]

- 1) Watch the video while trying to guess what might happen next
- 2) Find the hidden danger
- 3) Understand the points of advice
- 4) Watch the other-perspective views

JAF intends to roll-out new videos in the future, and hopes that such content will support foreign drivers with their driving safety while in Japan.
