TEPCO Employees in Demand

Energy Specialised Recruitment firm, EarthStream: Job Market Trend in Japan

6-June-2014, Tokyo, Japan - International specialist energy recruitment firm EarthStream has just marked its first year in Japan and has created a dedicated webpage for TEPCO employees who are seeking new employment opportunities .

Japan President Sean Travers comments “TEPCO employees are very well trained and have excellent knowledge of how the Japanese energy sector works making them very attractive to other employers so we have created a dedicated webpage for them to view and apply for highly specialized roles within the local energy market”.

With the Energy sector undergoing a huge transformation there has been a flood of International and Domestic Energy companies rushing to enter the local market. Due to the current market opportunities and strict project timelines, these companies are seeking experienced Energy professionals who can make an immediate impact to their current business.

As Sean Travers “TEPCO employees are in huge demand from a large number of energy companies and despite being underpaid, a large number still remain loyal so it is a challenge to recruit them but we see a change in the air where more and more employees are thinking that the time is right to leverage upon their existing experience and make a rewarding career change”.

TEPCO’s 25% pay cut remains in place which is in direct contrast to other companies within the Energy sector who are having to offer more salaries due to the opportunity cost of having their multi million dollar projects delayed due to lack of qualified employees.
